- You are always asked to give the name of the poem(s) and the name of the poet.
- You cannot use the unseen poem as your studied poem. However, examiners are well aware of the poems frequently chosen for study in the Junior Cert, so are unlikely to choose one of those as an unseen poem. If it should happen that the unseen poem is one you have studied, then you must choose another poem to use in your Studied Poetry answer. This should not pose a problem, as most students have a good knowledge of between six and twelve poems.
- Always check the marks allotted to each part of each question. These can vary from year to year.
- You will almost certainly be asked to comment on the language used in the poem. Even if you are not overtly asked to do so, it would be appropriate to devote at least one paragraph of your answer to the language, or mention it in each point if possible.
- Learn and use your key literary terms. (See page 195 in my book for a list of these.)

Sample Answers

2010 Imagine you have to recommend one poem that you have studied for a new publication entitled, A Book of Favourite Poems for Young People of the 21st Century.

Name the poem you would choose and explain why this particular poem would be suitable for inclusion in this collection.

In your answer you may wish to consider some of the following; the poem's theme, the way the poet uses language, the use of imagery, tone and/or mood, the structure of the poem, etc.

Note: This is a good option to choose because the question contains the bones of the plan you could use: '... consider some of the following; the poem's theme, the way the poet uses language, the use of imagery, tone and/or mood, the structure of the poem, etc.'

You should read the question very carefully before you begin planning your answer. Notice the way you are asked to choose a poem which would be suitable for young people. Every point you make about the poem should link back to that aspect of the question.

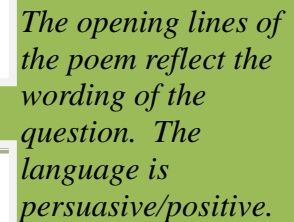

As this is a thirty mark question, you should aim to make six points in your answer, if possible. Five strong points would be fine too, and better than repeating yourself or going off the point in order to find a sixth point. Use your own judgement and common sense here, and remember that an introduction does not count as a point. The same applies to a conclusion.

Plan:

1. Introduction: 2006 survey – favourite poem – good reason – speaks to us all
2. Theme: all young people relate to idea of escape. Yeats wrote poem when young
3. Imagery: creates ideal world. Lovely vision and good for today's young people as it is a natural world he describes. Far from internet etc. Meditation
4. Language: beautiful, rich, evocative. No text-speak! Alliteration etc. Musical qualities
5. Structure: rhyme scheme creates a sense of harmony and peace
6. Tone: wistful and celebratory. Young people relate to former and find hope in latter
7. Overall effect: uplifting, food for thought in today's fast-paced world etc
8. Conclusion: poem deserves its place, would like to see it popular for years to come

Sample answer:

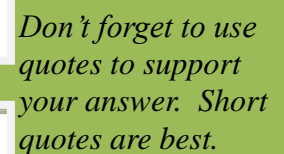

When I was asked to choose a poem for inclusion in A Book of Favourite Poems for Young People of the 21st Century, I didn't have a moment's hesitation in picking W.B. Yeats' The Lake Isle of Innisfree. I am not alone in loving this poem: it topped the poll in an Irish Times survey of the nation's favourite poems in 2006, and deservedly so. While the poem has a universal appeal, I believe that its message is of particular relevance to today's young people, and the beautiful way this message is expressed makes The Lake Isle a pleasure to read.

The opening lines of the poem reflect the wording of the question. The language is persuasive/positive.

The theme of the poem is one to which young people can easily relate: after all, who among us has not fervently wished that we could escape our busy classrooms or study halls, and be transported to a place so peaceful that the sounds of nature could be clearly heard? Instead of the shouts of students and the rumble of traffic outside, wouldn't it be wonderful to be somewhere where the buzzing of insects would seem loud, and the whirring flight of tiny songbirds would make the evening appear 'full of the linnet's wings'?

Yeats' ideal is centred on nature and a simple life where he will live in a 'small cabin... of clay and wattles made', and will need nothing more to sustain him than 'nine bean rows' and 'a hive for the honeybee'. In an overly-materialistic age when young people are constantly under pressure to keep up with the latest and greatest developments in technology and so on, I think it is wonderful to read a young man's vision of perfection as being somewhere beautiful, natural and simple. In an era when we are constantly in contact with others on phones, Facebook and Twitter, I think we would do well to consider taking a little time out and perhaps find some time to ourselves to meditate on what is really important in life. We may not have the chance to 'live alone in the bee-loud glade', but perhaps we could switch off for a little while, at least.

Don't forget to use quotes to support your answer. Short quotes are best.

The alluring images Yeats' creates in this poem are greatly enhanced by his skillful use of rich and evocative language. Again, in a time when we are bombarded with abbreviated text-speak and sloppy expression, I feel it is important for young people to see the power that language can have to fuel our imaginations and appeal to our senses. Yeats' vivid descriptions bring the Lake Isle to life for us, and we share his longing for a place where 'midnight's all a-glimmer, and noon a purple glow'. This is a poem that I would encourage all young people to read aloud because of its wonderful musical qualities. The soft 'l' and 's' sounds in the alliterative 'I hear lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore' perfectly capture the peace and communion with nature that is Yeats' dream.

Be sure to use key literary terms in your poetry answer.

Even the structure of this poem adds to its beauty. The regular ABAB rhyme scheme reflects the harmony and serenity that the poet sees in his beloved Innisfree where 'peace comes dropping slow'.

Short paragraphs are fine, but even in a short paragraph, you can include a quote.

Links between paragraphs make your answer flow.

This sense of peace and Yeats' love for the place where he spent some of his happiest hours are a large part of what makes this poem so appropriate for a young audience. Like many of us, Yeats is not completely happy at the time of writing; he has no desire to be on 'the pavements grey', and he is filled with longing for the idyllic Isle of Innisfree. This wistful tone is one which I certainly relate to, and I am sure I'm not alone in this. However, the poem is, above all, a celebration of Yeats' favourite place. His vision sustains him when he is homesick, and this is a very positive message for young people. We too should focus on all that is good in life and when we are feeling stressed or unhappy, perhaps we will be – like Yeats – lucky enough to have somewhere special to meditate on, a place that we too can feel in 'the heart's deep core'.

You must keep referring back to the question. Explain why each point is relevant for today's young people.

Overall, this is an uplifting, inspirational, beautifully crafted poem which appeals to us just as it has to generations of Irish readers. Culturally, this is an important poem and I think it is appropriate for all young Irish people to learn about, and hopefully identify with, our literary heritage.

Your conclusion should relate back to your introduction.

In conclusion, then, I believe that The Lake Isle of Innisfree deserves its place in any poetry anthology for today's young people, and I am confident that its place there will ensure that it remains firmly at the top of the list of Ireland's favourite poems.

2011 Junior Certificate Examination

Answer EITHER 1 OR 2 which follow.

1. From the poetry you have studied, identify a poem in which you feel the poet brings a person, a place or a thing vividly to life.

(i) Describe the person, the place or the thing brought vividly to life by the poet. (10)

(ii) In your opinion, what words or phrases used by the poet are the most effective in bringing the person, place or thing to life? Give reasons for your answer. (20)

a) I believe that the Lake Isle of Innisfree is brought to life very vividly in W.B. Yeats' poem of the same name. Yeats describes an idyllic, peaceful little island in the west of Ireland: a place where he longs to escape to when he is standing on 'the pavements grey' in London.

The island Yeats describes is a place of great natural beauty and his greatest wish is to live a self-sufficient life in this haven. He will grow his own food there, take honey from his hives, and 'live alone in the bee-loud glade'.

No matter what the time of day or night, the island is a serene and lovely place. The mists of morning hang like a veil over the island, and the fall of the dew gives the impression that 'peace comes dropping slow' there. Midday brings sunshine, and the purple heather is a blaze of colour, evening is full of the whirr of linnet's wings, and at night the stars fill the sky: 'midnight's all a glimmer'.

b) This poem is filled with vivid descriptions and imagery which bring Yeats' vision to life for us.

The first phrase which really brought the Lake Isle to life for me is in the second stanza. He describes the mist at daybreak as 'the veils of the morning', and this beautiful metaphor is most effective in capturing the gentle haziness of the start to another serene, perfect day on Innisfree. I can easily imagine the dew dropping slowly, like peace itself, from these gauzy veils.

Another phrase which caught my eye and made me think more deeply about the scene Yeats creates is 'evening full of the linnet's wings'. I thought this was a most unusual image in that I expected the poet to mention the bird's song rather than the noise its wings make as it flies. However, when I examined the line more closely, I found that it actually conjured up an even more peaceful scene than a description of birdsong ever could. The reason for this is that I was forced to think about how quiet it must be on the island if the whirr of this little bird's wings can fill the air.

The final image which transports me to the Lake Isle and makes me share Yeats' longing for it is in the last stanza. Recalled again to the present, Yeats says that his longing for Innisfree is with him 'night and day'. When he is standing 'on the roadway, or on the pavements grey,' the poet still hears, deep within him, 'lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore'. The soft, alliterative 'l', and 's' sounds emphasise the tranquillity of the scene, while the repetition of the consonants mirrors the repetitive motion of the water as it gently moves forward and back. The assonance in this line, combined with the fact that the vowel sounds are broad, again reinforces the slow pace of life on the island, where the only sound is the small waves of the lake lapping against the shore.

Yeats' description of the Lake Isle is so wonderfully evocative that I can completely understand why this place was somewhere that he carried with him always, 'in the deep heart's core.'
